Engage with challenging ethical and scientific questions

In partnership with The Faraday Institute for Science and Religion we are putting on a two-day conference which aims to equip Christians to be able to engage faithfully with challenging questions around bioethics in general, and gene editing as one example.

The sessions will encourage you in your walk with the Lord, and will give you greater confidence in understanding and speaking into some of the most critical questions of our day.

There will also be a chance to engage with one another, and to get out in the beautiful countryside surrounding Keswick too.

"It was great to meet people from all over the country and to equip them to engage well with science in their own local contexts."

Professor Sarah Perrett, Faraday Institute Course Director speaking about the 2021 event

Who's it for?

Church leaders, Christians in scientific professions, those with an interest in science/ethics.

What you'll get out of it?

You will grow in your ability to engage with key contemporary scientific and ethical issues, through a biblical lens.

Who's it with?

The Faraday Institute for Science and Religion.
